FRIDAY, JAN. 26, 1894.

This (January 26) is a red letter day in New South Wales, Australia. It is the hundred and sixth anniversary of the settlement of that colony. "Discovery day" is April 19, the next one marking the 124th year since Captain Cook first set eyes on the great southern continent.

Nothing would appear to be too despicable for the Star to attempt thing to do with it. in the way of slurs on political opponents. A letter in yesterday's twinkler purporting to be from a British subject, assails Mr. Davies for alleged ill treatment of sailors on liven hard and fast on a coral reef at the Villalta. Mr. Davies has no more the entrance to Honolulu harbor for to do with the sailers on the Villalta over a month, but was eventually than has the man in the moon. It is besides a malicious falsehood that the sailors on that vessel are ill-treated. The Star attack has disgusted brings no news of importance. several American shipmasters who admire Captain Harland for his fine management of his ship. Sailors of no other nationality are so well proarrangements, and as to food, as are those of Great Britain. The Star slanderer cannot get a man on the on the head of the firm of the vessel's consignees.

ANOTHER ISANDULA

How Lobengula's Men Entrapped

and Butchered the Wilson Party. Care Town, Jan. 15. Details of the massacre of Captain Wilson's party by Matabeles have been received from natives who were with King Lobenguia at the time of the fight. Wilson's party consisted of forty British troopers and about 100 native auxiliaries. They came upon King Lobengula, who had a strong force. Confident that the spirit of Matabeles was thoroughly broken and intent on capturing the king. Wilson, without taking precautions against surprise, dashed forward with his troopers. Lobenguia, discovering the smallness of the attacking force, planned a successful ruse. He ordered the centre of his column to retreat before the British advance, while the flanks fell. away on either side in order to sur round the British. The plan worked perfectly. The troopers, dashing recklessly forward, soon left the native auxiliaries far behind. Then the Matabeles in front made a stand. and those on the flanks began to close in. Wilson discovered his danger and tried to cut his way out to join his auxiliaries, but the Mata belos pressed him on every side in overwhelming numbers. The troop ers' horses fell beneath them and they were finally compelled to make a life and death stand, fighting from behind their dead horses as breast works. Ammunition for their car bines soon gave out, and they then had to resort to their revolvers, and. when there were no more cartridges for them, defending themselves with their swords.

Meanwhile the savages pressed closer and closer, and finally with savage yells swept down upon those who remained alive of the little band, and with assegais and clubs beat them to earth, and all was over after a struggle characterized by almost unexampled bravery. So ended another tragic chapter in the history of Great Britain's military operations in Africa, in which, as in others, perished some of her bravest sol diers and young sons of some of her best families, sent out to get the first taste of war. Among the officers in the Wilson party were Capts. Fitzgerald. Judd. Greenfield, Kirton and Barrow, and Lieutenants Hughes and Hoffmeyer. Among the men of the line who went down under the irresis tible forces of the savages was a son of Sir Julius Vogel, formerly agent general for New Zealand in London During the latter part forces was unwounded, and some of them were hit a dozen times. All reports are to the effect that the young troopers made a most gallant, tion. defense, keeping the savages at bay a comparatively long time owing to their accurate marksmanship and the steadiness with which they faced certain death. It was estimated that about 4000 savages participated in the attack, while the British are monia Jan 15. said to have numbered only thirtyfour. After all was over the triumphant natives stripped the selves of the weapous.

LATE FOREIGN NEWS.

> THE BRAZILIAN WAR. The Minister of Foreign Affairs at

Rio de Janeiro has authorized the United Press to give an account of the release of Bage from a siege that plete rout for the insurgents, who abandoned their baggage and munitions of war. The Government loss was 36 killed and 90 wounded. The insurgents lost 100 killed and wounded. It is reported the insurgents committed outrages in their retreat. Houses were sacked and everal men have been found with their throats cut. Two Government soldiers who had been captured by the enemy were burned alive.

A British steamer has arrived at Rio from Porto Alegro, capital of the State of Rio Grande do Sul. and reports that the Government is in 941 a undisturbed possession of the coast of that State.

A despatch evidently partial to the Government represents the insurgents in a bad way and losing strength in the south. Unless Mello recovers and is able to reanimate his men the outlook for the insurgents is very dark. Desertions in their ranks are said to be numerous, and fever is also thinning them out. The inhabitants of Rio, it is asserted, are heartily tired of the war, and the epidemic raging there makes the desire for peace all the stronger. On the other hand. Rio despatches received at Buenos Ayres on the 16th state that the rebel flagship Aquidaban had taken up a position in front of the custom house preparing to land troops. The insurgents have captured Eugenio island. Forty Government troops were kill-ed and 60 captured. The Government has sent reinforcements to Nictheroy. The Government forces on Saturday tried to capture the insurgent cruiser Guanabara, but were beaten off with heavy loss. Washington, Jan. 16. - This morn ing Secretary Herbert received a cable message saying the cruiser New York had arrived at Rio last night. The New York did not stop at any port during the last 3500 miles of her journey, as the Department was anxious to have her reach Rio in the quickest possible time. The voyage was a remarkably fast one. Other United States vessels at Rio are the San Francisco, Charles
